The Importance of Parental Involvement in Education

Recently Christopher Koch, State Superintendent of Schools, posted a letter to parents on the Illinois State Board of Education website emphasizing the important role parents play in their children's education. Below are the contents of that letter.

I am writing today to welcome you and your family back to school and to encourage you to remain involved in your child's education, both inside and outside the classroom. Your involvement will help your sons and daughters be more successful now and in the future.

Our children need all of our support to reach their potential as great thinkers, innovators, and leaders. The commitment we make now will benefit our state and country as they become citizens of the world, competing and collaborating in an ever-changing global landscape.

Educators play a critical role of teaching knowledge and skills but children's attitudes toward school and their habits of studying, reading and learning, are largely developed at home.

Studies have consistently linked parental involvement with higher student grades and test scores, more positive student attitudes and behaviors, and improved school environments. Family participation in education was found to be twice as predictive of academic learning as family socioeconomic status.

There are many ways to be involved with your children's learning. This includes not only establishing routine homework habits but also making time to get to know your child's teacher and other staff members at his or her school and asking how your child can find success this school year.

I pledge to work tirelessly on behalf of the more than two million children in kindergarten through 12th grade across Illinois to ensure they are prepared for college and careers in the 21st century. Please join me in this pledge so that our children can be successful in the 2009-2010 school year and beyond.

As Dr. Koch stated, it is the combination of the school and parent involvement in a child's education that determines the educational success. I would like to personally thank you for your involvement in your child's education and challenge you, as Dr. Koch did, to find even more ways to become involved.
